Program

Early learning classrooms today seem to place more demands on staff than ever before. This session will explore ways to address today's diversity and challenges so that young learners can have the best possible classroom experience. Navigating the needs of families and their young children can be complex, particularly in the midst of a pandemic. This session will provide tips and strategies to assist early learning staff in meeting families where they are at and helping young children to move forward in their developmental journey.

Presenters

Isabelle Plomp

Isabelle Plomp has spent 39 years as a teacher/administrator in the early learning field. She is a passionate advocate for the importance of the early years. This past decade Isabelle has been extensively involved in promoting optimal brain development for young children, both within school settings and the community
